The use of topical analgesics has been attempted in the treatment of painful temporomandibular disorders. These agents might play a role in the management of masticatory muscle disorders and arthritic pain. In this study, an 8% lidocaine gel was evaluated in 12 patients with painful temporomandibular disorders. Side effects and subjective responses to treatment were observed. The gel was applied topically in contact with the painful area and was compared with an identical placebo gel. All topical formulations were applied 2 to 4 times per day during the first 2 to 3 days of treatment. Pain on opening and closing of the mouth and on lateral excursive movements were measured using a verbal rating scale. The number of hours during the day that subjects could
