With a network of offices around the world, including approximately 15,000 employees in the United States alone, Autodesk has more than 300 offices worldwide and over 4 million registered users of its software. (NYSE) under the ticker symbol "ADSK."
How AutoCAD Works When AutoCAD first began as a desktop app on microcomputers, the software was strictly a drafting and editing tool. Its early users were engineers and architects at companies such as Boeing, General Electric, and Pratt & Whitney. Because of this niche market, AutoCAD was not originally advertised to consumers. In 1989, AutoCAD became available to consumers on computers running the OS/2 operating system. By the mid-1990s, Autodesk had added color to the basic 2D drafting tools, added 3D features, and introduced additional 2D and 3D templates and stock items. With the advent of Windows NT and Windows 2000, AutoCAD was ported to the newer operating system. AutoCAD was among the first major CAD products available for the personal computer. Over the years, Autodesk added features such as smart editing, layer management, and drafting templates, and expanded its library of drawings to include profiles, 3D models, and exploded views. In 2010, Autodesk introduced the AutoCAD LT app, which was a free version of AutoCAD with fewer tools and editing features. At Autodesk we've always worked to make sure AutoCAD is designed to be as intuitive and productive as possible. It's built on a proven platform designed to support thousands of engineers and architects as they turn ideas into reality, and deliver world-class software for more than 100 years. Our commitment is to provide you with the best tools and techniques for solving complex design and engineering challenges. Today, AutoCAD is a go-to application for designers and engineers everywhere. AutoCAD Key Features The following list is a condensed, non-exhaustive summary of features available in AutoCAD. You can find much more information about AutoCAD in the AutoCAD Help manual. AutoCAD is available as a free Category:AutoCAD About 3,000 families in four West County towns that lost their water service following an order from a state judge have obtained water service again — at least for now. A Water and Wastewater Service official told The Enterprise that the water service was restored for all customers in Hingham, Scituate, Weymouth and South Shore communities as of last week. Service may not be restored to those customers for at least a week, however, said the official, who asked not to be identified. The Scituate and Weymouth customers initially were told that the service was being restored on a “case-by-case” basis. On Wednesday, The Enterprise reported that the service had been restored. Hingham and South Shore customers are being notified by letter to come back to the Hingham and South Shore town offices to pick up new water service. A Water and Wastewater Service official said in a letter to the South Shore News that the service would be restored only if the affected customers were there to pick up the new service. “If you have not been notified and therefore have not come to the office to pick up new water service, the service will not be restored for that customer,” wrote Aileen Cote, manager of Utilities for the town of Scituate. Cote wrote that the affected customers who have not yet received new service must call the Utilities department at 508-472-6386. A Water and Wastewater Service official told The Enterprise that the decision to restore water service came after being directed to do so by a state court order, which was issued in response to a lawsuit against the Water and Wastewater Service by 43 neighbors of East Hingham, Hingham and Scituate. “The department has been directed to restore water service to those customers that had been previously notified,” the official said. “There were some customers that were notified and (were) just no longer in the right location and therefore have not been notified,” the official said. “For those customers, I know there is a feeling on their part that they should get their water service back as soon as possible,” the official said 5b5f913d15
