Amazon employees in Portland, Seattle and San Francisco all showed up at stores to pre-order the 10.1-inch, Wi-Fi-only Kindle Fire at midnight. Amazon listed the Kindle Fire as a "limited edition" model and priced it at $199 -- a $130 reduction from the regular $299 price -- for an introductory price while the Android-powered tablet was being customized. "Kindle is the most successful product in our history and we believe that Kindle Fire will have the broadest global appeal of any tablet," said Jeff Bezos, CEO of Amazon, in a blog post announcing the tablet. "We hope that hundreds of millions of people around the globe will use Kindle Fire to start discovering the world of reading." Amazon made the Kindle Fire available at Best Buy in New York City and in Cambridge, Massachusetts, on Wednesday, and on Thursday at Barnes & Noble and Apple stores. A trip to the office kitchen is all that is required to download the popular Kindle app, which already works with 2.5 million e-readers and is available for free on any mobile device.
