It's a neat software solution that allows you to create reports on your personality, compatibility with another person and yearly forecast using simply your name and date of birth.Q: Should the Library be responsible for choosing the Service Provider I have two thoughts here. 1. I am using a Service Provider which provides me with a Service to connect to my Database. 2. I am using a Library which provides me with a Database. I am looking for some sort of architectural pattern, should I be responsible for choosing which one of these is best suited to my situation? A: First of all, I would not recommend that you use two libraries/frameworks that would not suit the same purpose, nor would you use two different communication channels (a service and a library), unless they are complementary. This being said, I think that you should choose the one that works best for your needs. Maybe you are thinking that the library is too heavy for your needs and you don't want to change it right now, or maybe you have some internal constraints that are preventing you from implementing your ideas in the library (and you want to use a service instead), etc. If you think that the library/framework is not the right one for your needs, but you can't make a choice because of some constraints, it's ok to fall back on the abstract principle of "if it ain't broke, don't fix it", which means that you should keep using the library for now and see if the situation changes and if not, you can consider implementing the required functionality in your service. Also, consider using DI in order to decouple your dependencies, if possible. 5 Great Desserts for February There are plenty of ways to treat yourself during these cold months, and we've rounded up five sweets that are a tasty treat any time of the year. 1. Apple Strudel Why is the apple strudel so popular? Because it's quick to make, simple to put together and—most importantly—takes advantage of seasonal ingredients, from plump, tart apples to a golden crumble topping. 2. Salted Caramel Cheesecake The star of our roundup is a sweet, fluffy cheesecake with a simple crust and a glaze made from dark, rich caramel that's finished with a hefty sprinkle of salt. 3. Slow Cooker Pumpkin Bread Pumpkin bread
