

Neuromodulatory mechanisms underlying learning-related changes in glycine-evoked excitatory post-synaptic currents in prefrontal neurons. Neurons in the medial prefrontal cortex (mPFC) are believed to play an important role in the cognitive and emotional control of learning. Modulatory effects of the endogenous glycine receptor (GlyR) activators, glycine and taurine, on glycinergic neurotransmission in mPFC are unknown. Here, we analyzed the effects of these agents on synaptic transmission in layer II/III pyramidal cells of the mPFC in brain slices of juvenile (postnatal day 14-19) and adult (3-4 months) rats. In both ages, synaptic currents evoked in pyramidal cells by stimulating pyramidal cell-associated Schaffer collateral fibers were reversibly blocked by the GlyR antagonist strychnine. Taurine also reversibly suppressed synaptic currents by a GlyR-independent mechanism. Glycine-induced synaptic currents were not affected by the $\alpha 1$ -subunit GlyR antagonist, though bath application of glycine activated tetrodotoxin-sensitive glycine receptors in pyramidal cells. In addition, both juvenile and adult rat slices exhibited a presynaptic taurine-evoked increase in the quantal release of the monoamine neurotransmitters, dopamine and serotonin. However, postsynaptic currents evoked by this treatment in juvenile and adult pyramidal cells were not altered in size or time course, indicating that taurine does not activate postsynaptic glycine receptors in mPFC. This suggests that endogenous glycine concentrations in mPFC influence excitatory synaptic transmission by tonically enhancing GlyR activity on the postsynaptic membrane.
