To know more information about the application you can visit the website below In this tutorial, I'll show you how to add a new native Android game to your existing Android Studio and publish it to Google Play. As mentioned in the introduction, there are basically two steps. The first is to build your native Android game from Android Studio. The second is to publish it on Google Play. The first thing you need is to have an Android game project. You can use an existing one. I use a sample Android game called "Pitfall" provided by Google. So the screenshot I posted is of the Pitfall game. There is also a small tutorial on how to start working with a new Android Studio project. The second step is to add the game in the Google Play developer console To add a new game, open the developer console in the Play Store and hit the "+" button on the top right. You should see this screen. You should also see the directory structure. The "YourAppName" folder that you need to create is indeed the name of your Android game. Click the "+" button on the top right again. This time, you get a new Google page. Fill in all the required information for you new native Android game, and hit create. You should now see your new Android game in the list. Click "Pitfall" to open the game info page. Notice that the "Package Name", "Application Name" and "Package Path" are all the same as the sample Android project you already have? You can use the same values you have. "Name" is what your app is going to be called. Go with the default value for now. "Description" is a short description of your app. We'll add more details later. "Version" is the version number, like 1.0. "Author" is your package name. I usually use the name I gave to the new Android game. "Maintainers" is the Google Play developer console name for your account. I created the Android game as a free user. So I used the default "appletalk". Once you've filled in all the fields, hit "Save and Continue" Congratulations! You have just added a new Android game. Now, the second step is to publish
