YearPlanner is a calendar tool for individuals, groups, and organizations. YearPlanner lets you create, manage and print an entire year of appointments, events, holidays etc. It is different from almost all other calendar software. It picks up from where Microsoft Outlook and many other similar programs finish. Plan on a single multi-month page from 1 to 12 months using the classic planner layout usually only available as a wall chart. Home users remember appointments, schedule holidays and plan special events. Schools and colleges create academic year plans and term time tables. Businesses plan projects and schedule resources. YearPlanner is a brand new, stylish, feature rich calendar tool with a difference. It presents calendar data in the 12 month wall-chart layout. Unlike a wall-chart YearPlanner shows you the year ahead " not just the calendar year. This gives you an unprecedented strategic view of up and coming events. No other calendar program has this approach at the core of its design. YearPlanner is a Microsoft Windows compatible application which manages, organizes, and presents calendar based events-data for individuals, groups, and organizations. It can be used as a diary, scheduler, project management tool or any other application that requires a long term view of calendar data. YearPlanner delivers a high degree of flexibility and control. You can define colour schemes, fonts, and layouts. You can also define the start date, start day-of-week, and weekend days. In fact you can even import calendar data directly from Microsoft Outlook. Limitations: 30 days trial So what happens when the clock strikes two in 2016, and the time has come for Apple's next big event, its annual WWDC. It's all but official: We're about to get details on the iPad Pro, Apple's 7th-gen iPod nano and even the return of wearable computers in the form of the iWatch 2. But with the highly-anticipated annual event about to begin, it was only a matter of time before a number of screenshots from the schedule started to make their way into the Internet. And so, after a source familiar with Apple's wireless event leaks a handful of gifs in a tweet (above), it's possible that we're about to see the launch of the iPad Pro. The images, as you can see, depict the various panels that will appear on Apple's September 12th "special event". And as with past years, we'll see the usual host of company executives will be on hand to take part in the festivities, including CEO Tim Cook, Vice President of Worldwide Software Engineering Craig Federighi and VP of Hardware Engineering
