Full story of the Mahabharat in Malayalam Books.Q: Python script performance issues I have a Python script that takes a 'list' of files from a directory tree and checks if a list of words are present in each file. If the words are not present then it creates a list called 'new_words_to_look_for'. The next thing the script does is it checks if any of the words in the files are listed in the 'new_words_to_look_for' list. If they are then the script does something else. For my test set I have a directory tree where each file contains a list of 'numbers'. Most of the 'numbers' are words but some are other words like 'fff' or 'ffj'. Each of the 'numbers' in one file are not in the others files. In this case, this means that the script will not detect the 'numbers' as matching words. The issue I have is that this script is slow because it has to check each of the files and I don't know a good way to make this happen faster. I have tried using a dictionary and storing a list of words that are in each file but I don't see how this is going to be faster. import os import sys import glob import glob2 import re import collections import pickle dictionary_file = "D:/subfolder/dictionary.txt" new_words_to_look_for = ["abs", "adj", "all", "amazing", "appreciate", "any", "as", "be", "better", "bigger", "bite", "cat", "chairs", "cats", "change", "ch 3da54e8ca3
