Based on the physics engine used in FIFA Ultimate Team™, "HyperMotion Technology" uses real-life player movement data – including rotation, acceleration, deceleration, forces, the timing and location of actions – combined with in-game physics to create an experience unlike anything that has ever been created before. All players will benefit from unparalleled control and action on the ball, and players and teams will be able to apply all their skills and explosiveness to make the most of the rewards available to them. "HyperMotion Technology" also features Active Touch Control, which means players will no longer need to touch the ball for it to fly into the goal. The ball will roll and skim off players who are in open space, and will also be able to curve and spin on contact when tackling or aerial dueling. "In FIFA Ultimate Team, we've used data from every other EA Sport franchise," said Richard Latham, Executive Producer at Electronic Arts. "However, we want to broaden that by creating our own brand and original franchise experiences. FIFA 21 and Fifa 22 Activation Code are some of the most beautiful, immersive and authentic football games ever created, and we are thrilled to now be able to bring our unique 'HyperMotion Technology' to our fans for the first time." There's also a new Franchise mode where players will be able to compete as a club, or create their own club. This FIFA franchise allows players to customize their club for every opportunity to modify everything from the kits, to the stadiums and to the players themselves. Players will be able to also play for their hometown club, and/or recruit retired professionals to help them. "Fifa 22 Activation Code is a true celebration of football," said Peter Moore, Chief Executive Officer of Electronic Arts. "Our 'HyperMotion Technology' will enable us to create the most authentic football experience ever made, and we're incredibly proud to share it with our fans."
