thesis.For Democratic U.S. Rep. William Lacy Clay, a student loan moratorium is not out of the question. President Barack Obama has vowed to put on a “continuing moratorium” on payments for all federal student loans. “I’m willing to look at whether we’re doing all we can to affordably further incentivize folks that have student loans to make sure they’re paying them off,” Clay told the Missouri Democrat Voice in an interview Wednesday. “There are a lot of ways that we can help people.” Clay, who is president of the National Black Caucus of State Legislators, has a net worth of $11,537,944 according to the Center for Responsive Politics. That’s nearly three times the amount of net worth held by the average member of Congress, which was $3,891,578 at the end of last year. Clay said there should be an idea that is sent from Capitol Hill “for states to implement” that would address the plight of students. “Student loan reform is an issue that needs to be fixed and addressed,” he said. “It’s getting further and further behind and it’s very unfortunate.” An example of what Missouri could do to help stop the burden that student loan debt places on young people, Clay said, is to provide funds to make sure students can get good jobs. “Maybe we can provide additional money to our colleges so if our kids go to college they’ll be able to get a good job,” he said. Clay, who was last elected to Congress in 2010, said he hasn’t met Obama or Education Secretary Arne Duncan. He said he looked forward to meeting them. There’s also the opportunity for the state to look at raising the tuition cap. “I’m in favor of a tuition cap,” Clay said. “I think that if we can help people find jobs and if they don’t have jobs then we’re doing everybody a favor if we help people who can’t afford college.” Clay said he also would like to see Missouri become more aggressive when it comes to exploring and extracting natural resources in the state. “I would love
