subsequently announced in July 2009 that they had no plans on releasing this title in North America, due to concerns on the “cost and complexities” required to port the game for the Nintendo DSi.[1] In Mario Party 8, the basic gameplay mode remains identical to the previous title, Mario Party 7. Players once again face off in a board, the 2D board in this title. Once more than two players have signed up, a four-player “Mario Party” can be played. Mario Party 8 features eight new board themes that range from “Virtual Sushi” to “Special stage.” In addition to the standard single-player mode, Mario Party 8 also includes a two-player versus mode, allowing players to compete against each other. While in this mode, players can use the Wii Remote and Nunchuk or the balance board and Wii Remote, enabling the players to interact with the game’s environment and their opponents. Mario Party 8 also includes a recommended that your hardware configuration be as high-end as possible. - It is recommended that you play this experience with a VR-ready PC. How did it go? that's the question. Q: Task DbContext performs more than expected I have a Task method, which I must run to test multiple database context. public int TryExecute(IDbConnection connection, IDbConnection productionConnection) { using (var dbContext = _dbContextFactory.CreateDbContext(connection)) { //Do some business logic } } I am using a factory which will populate the connection, and for each one I will create a new dbContext. I am sure I am missing something but the issue is that the TryExecute method is executed for each connection,

even when i am adding only one!
Is there a way to force this method to have only one connection and one dbContext? A: You're using the same instance of your connection in each call, which means that one call will execute the code for the first connection, and then the next call will execute the code for the second connection. Most likely, you want to create a new instance of your DbContext each time, for each connection you call

TryExecute(IDbConnection connection, IDbConnection productionConnection) { using (var dbContext = _dbContextFacto ry.CreateDbContext(connection)) { //Do some business logic } }

Instead of the above, try this: public int

---

```
TryExecute(IDbConnection
connection, IDbConnection productionConnection) { using (var dbContext = _dbContextFacto
ry.CreateDbContext(connection))
{ //Do some business logic
//Change

- Download SpellGroove from one of the 4 download servers listed on the Instructions page. It is also available as a.zip file.
- Download the snapshot and extract the contents of the ZIP into a directory. Use “yyyymmdd” appended to the location to name the folder.
- Open “File System Editor,” go to the “C:\” or “C:\Program Files” folder, and find the folder “SpellGroove-yyyymmdd\,” and replace with the directory from the extracted ZIP file.
