This known drive can be adapted to quite different purposes. For instance, it is particularly suitable as a drive for the wheels of cranes. The drive generally comprises a worm or worm wheel and a worm gear which mesh with one another, and a motor which drives one of these two gears. The other gear can be fixed to a stationary part of the crane. With this drive, a variable reduction ratio can be made over a relatively large load range without changing the worm gear. The drive can also be adapted to the particular needs. For instance, the motor can be a motor
