This book was created using only Photoshop CS4. (You can download and try a free 30-day trial at www.adobe.com/products/photoshop/trial/.) You can use the techniques in this book using any version of Photoshop you have installed, but this book was created with Photoshop CS4 in mind. I highly recommend that you try to use the same version of Photoshop if you are currently using it. If you use Photoshop CS4, you also will find it very easy to switch to CS5 using the instructions on the Photoshop Web site at www.adobe.com/products/photoshop/for-photographers/understanding-photoshop/cs5-overview.html. You don't need Photoshop to create or edit images. But you will need Photoshop to create or edit images with those created using the techniques in this book. There are plenty of other software packages available for editing or creating images, and I describe many of them throughout this book. Like most new tools, Photoshop can take some getting used to. That's why I try to explain all the tools and features I use as I create some images. The following sections give you a crash course on Photoshop's more significant tools and features, including those used in this book. Taking a look at the menus

The two biggest icons on the right side of the Photoshop window are the menus, as you can see in Figure 1-1. Figure 1-1: Use the menus to access all the tools and features in Photoshop. Everything that you do in Photoshop is controlled through the menus. The Photoshop menus show you the available commands for the tools you use in this book. Simply point to the menu you want to open to reveal the features and actions that you can perform with that tool. If you prefer to have a lot of icons on the menus to open multiple programs at once, as shown in Figure 1-2, you can enable Smart Arrange, which enables you to perform multiple operations with the same command by grouping it with other commands. For example, selecting the Selection tool doesn't select the object in the image; you actually click the pixels of the object. When you perform multiple actions, the commands are grouped together in a Smart Arrange — one to the right, the other below it. Figure 1-2: Most of the time, you simply click the icon for the menu option you want to use. To see what

Q: JQuery: assign color style to all class i have classes such as .red, .blue and .green and i have an array inside it arr[i] = '#FF0000' ; i want this code to assign all color on all classes with these classes. how can i achieve that? thanks

A: If your array contents are all valid CSS colour strings (both HSLA and RGB), then you can do this: `$('.[class^="' + arr.join(''],[class^="' + ''']).css('background-color', arr.join('rgb(0,0,0)'))`

Demo: Q: Varnish purge cache - REST or real HTTP? I'm setting up a varnish cache server and i'd like to use as much of the varnish api as possible. I've been googling around for a while to find what the difference is between purging a cache with real HTTP requests instead of using the REST API. I couldn't find any info. What is the real difference?

A: How Varnish works is basically it sends a request to the backend and if the backend was not able to comply to Varnish's request, it returns a status 503 response, which is basically what a real HTTP backend would do. However, it could be that you've got a web server in front of Varnish and the response is not really what you want. For example, when using Apache, you would normally return an HTML page (for example, 404 Not Found). If Varnish was in front, you would see the real page you've sent. In this case, Varnish has different ways to "purge" its cache, e.g., the following:

- Unlinked pages: If Varnish received the page, it stores the URL in an HTTP cookie. If the next request comes, Varnish creates a request to the backend with the URL in the cookie. If the backend serves the page, it makes Varnish delete the cookie.
- Unused pages: If Varnish receives a page but doesn't have a copy, it doesn't store it in the cache.
- Cache purging: Varnish can purge the cache with the PUR
