Law enforcement in North Dakota This article outlines the current law enforcement structure of North Dakota and how it operates. Law enforcement in North Dakota is primarily divided between state and local agencies. Certain law enforcement functions are split between the state of North Dakota and federal agencies. Laws and regulations North Dakota statute The North Dakota Criminal Code gives the Attorney General the authority to conduct investigations on behalf of the governor. The Governor is authorized to employ lawyers, investigators, and other personnel to conduct investigations on his or her behalf. The statute gives the Governor the authority to appoint inspectors to conduct investigations regarding, among others, agriculture, fish, wildlife, game and fish, and safety. The statute gives the Governor the authority to make rules for the enforcement of the provisions of the code. State agencies North Dakota requires a non-judicial agency designated to regulate gambling. These agencies are: The North Dakota Racing Commission regulates pari-mutuel wagering, including in-person bookmaking, horse racing and greyhound racing in the state. The state gaming commission establishes policy guidelines, monitors gaming facilities, and investigates violations of state gaming laws. The State Racing Board is responsible for establishing rules and regulations for all racing establishments and the board itself enforces the state racing laws. The State Gaming Control Board oversees the statutory authority to promote gambling in the state. The board enforces the state's gambling laws and works with local governments, tribes, and licensees. As specified in the state's gambling control board laws, the North Dakota State Police acts as the general law enforcement agency for the state. The agency is tasked with enforcing all state laws, including those associated with the production and distribution of alcoholic beverages and illegal drugs. The agency's law enforcement officers are all sworn peace officers. The North Dakota
