Silk screening is a form of silk-screen printing. This technique allows for the most precise printing of fabrics when compared to other printing methods. The method consists of applying the material to be printed (in the form of a "stencil" or screen), pressing it onto a silk canvas, and pressing it further onto the substrate. Silk screen printers usually print on a water-soluble silk, but can also use woven, unwoven, and synthetic fabrics such as nylon or acetate. The technique was developed in the early 20th century by the architect and furniture designer William Morris and his partner Charles Robert Ashbee. In 1922 the Norvell Institute of Art, Arts and Industries in New York City was the first place to mass-produce silk screens. Silk screening is commonly used to fabricate fashion patterns for clothing, footwear, and accessories. It is also used to print on a range of paper-based products, including adhesive-backed tickets, gift wrap, stationery, and packaging.
