The effects of some diclofenac preparations on the lens were tested in vitro by means of the double chamber method. At each test, the diclofenac preparations were put into one side of the double chamber and osmolarity of the cell culture medium was decreased in the other side. The permeability of diclofenac into the cells through the chamber was checked by the measurement of the tritium dose in the medium of the other side. The dose of diclofenac was determined by HPLC analysis. The osmolarity in the culture medium was fixed to 300 mosmol/l. Changes in the tritium dose against changes in osmolarity were used to estimate lens permeability. The dose was calculated in terms of diclofenac uptake into the cells. The preparations were used for the test by means of labeled diclofenac. There
