Toro Aladdin Dongles Monitor 64 Bit --.For the first time, the Muslim Brotherhood has hired a lawyer to seek an injunction forcing Egypt's interim prime minister and military chief of staff to step down. "We are going to be demanding that they are removed," a senior Brotherhood official, Khaled Abdel-Ghafar, said Tuesday. The official spoke on condition of anonymity in line with official Brotherhood policy. It comes after the Brotherhood's governing political party won last week's parliamentary election in Egypt, which the military ousted the Muslim Brotherhood's former longtime leader, Mohamed Morsi. Story continues below advertisement The military claimed the election was held in "an atmosphere of political incitement and violence." The Brotherhood is challenging the election, saying the military's four-year rule of Egypt has been illegitimate. It has insisted Mr. Morsi and his supporters were the victims of a conspiracy against democracy. The Brotherhood's actions were a move first announced by the party in November after Mr. Morsi was ousted. Under the new strategy, Mr. Abdel-Ghafar said the party will act quickly to remove the emergency law that allows the military to intervene in politics, limit its authority and lift a ban on the Muslim Brotherhood. "They have no right to interfere in the election or the upcoming parliamentary elections," he said. The Brotherhood will challenge the parliamentary election in the country's highest court, he said, despite the fact it lost the election. Mr. Abdel-Gh c6a93da74d
