Freehand 10 adds support for MapServer, an open source raster map server. Freehand MX is integrated tightly with MapServer. It can submit map requests, pass raster data in NetCDF format, and pull from GeoRSS or other RSS feeds. This is the free version of the Macromedia Freehand MX 11.0.2 compatible with Microsoft Windows XP, Vista, 7. The average size of this package is 10.6 MB. With this pre-installed into the system, you can use the software as it is. You can also work on multiple projects at the same time and stay in sync with the latest versions, updates and changes with the main application. It is the most complete free of charge application that is compatible with Adobe Acrobat, so you can use it in any situation. You cannot create 3D work in any way, shape or form using a flat editing method, but I can, in any normal editing program. With freehand, I can use the edges of an object to turn it a rectangular shape and use that as a base for a 3D work, where I then create the final object. For example: There can be a plan in a house, but I can use the bottom of the plan to turn it rectangular and create a wall. Then I can use the other side of the bottom of the plan to create a roof. And then the top of the roof can create the ceiling. Freehand MX comes with its own font library, 50 document templates, the ability to import Adobe Illustrator and Photoshop files, an auto-save feature, a feature that allows you to undo any changes, an improved text feature that works with the Layer To Path command and the ability to run the current project as a single document or as a series of documents.
